

Diritti umani e diritto internazionale was established in 2007 by a number of Italian and foreign international law scholars. It aims at investigating international protection of human rights, particularly from the legal point of view, albeit with an interdisciplinary perspective. It has helped to fill a gap in the Italian legal literature, so as to keep the pace with similar experiences in Europe. The high quality of the Journal is testified by the Board of Editors and the Scientific Council, composed by Italian and foreign experts, of recognized competence. From the beginning of its publication, the papers published in the Journal have been revised by anonymous referees; many of these papers (sometimes written in a foreign language) are from some of the most well-known scholars in the field.
