Breve descrizione

The module aims at contributing to the current European and international debate on the relation between competition rules and social inequalities. Social inequality is a Eu-related policy contained in Title X of the TFEU, although it is not among the core competences of the European Union. However, the need for a European action pursuing a fairer wealth distribution is the object of a growing request by European citizens. The module suggests to address this demand through a renewed interpretation of a traditional European policy: antitrust. The underlying assumption is the necessity and feasibility of rethinking the EU competition policy in order to foster the progressive redistribution of wealth in Europe. It is intended to constitute a first core of teaching and research to analyze the relationship between competition law and social inequality in the European Union.
