Breve descrizione

The combination of wrong policies, increasing disagreements among European Union Member States and their unwillingness to allocate enough resources to implement positive measures contribute to the current lack of internal cohesion and solidarity. Despite these difficulties, the Principle of Solidarity continues to be one of the potential solutions to many of the current challenges: management of migrations, refugees, natural and man-made disasters, terrorism and climate change. With this background in mind, the Jean Monnet Module, entitled 'Solidarity in EU Law (SoEULaw)', has the objective to gather interest in the critical analysis of the legal obligations and justiciability questions that the Principle of Solidarity introduces. The module aims to attract different target groups and increase the dialogue between different Jean Monnet communities to debate the functions and challenges of the Solidarity clause. By promoting academic and non-academical interest, the Module seeks to fill in the awareness and knowledge gap. In the framework of the Module, in order to create a new knowledge-sharing and debate network, several activities are proposed: lectures, workshops, training courses, winter schools, webinars and conferences. The Module aims to mobilize interest among students and gather professors from other research communities, such as from the Jean Monnet Centre of Excellence on Regional Integration of the University of Alcalá (Spain), the Centre of Excellence of the Université Aix-en-Marseille CERIC (France) and the Chair established in Federal University of Santa Catarina (Brazil). As a mid-term outcome, the SoEULaw Module will create a new international collaborative teaching, learning and research network by inviting and engaging different target groups including university professors, post-doc researchers, PhD candidates, students, high-school teachers, practitioners such as lawyers and others who may be interested in the implementation of the Solidarity Principle. Methodologies of comparative legal research will be used to access the different conceptions of solidarity in EU Law, International Law and National Law. On the long-term, the SoEULaw Module will potentially impact and contribute to more efficient implementation of solidarity not only at the European Union level, but also beyond, since the project seeks to attract debate with non-EU participants. All the research findings, lecture notes and other didactic materials are available on the Module website.
