Breve descrizione

The objective of the proposed module is to deepen the knowledge and awareness of the functioning of EU democracy and decision-making processes, mechanisms of citizens' participation and EU e-participation tools, thus contributing to the formation of a transnational public sphere. To this end, the analysis will focus in particular, but not exclusively, on how electronic tools can influence the dynamics of the interinstitutional dialogue and deliberation involving citizens, and on how they impact on processes of information, agenda setting and consultation, based on Articles 10 and 11, TEU. The module consists of teaching activities and seminars, also delivered by former senior EU high officers, addressed to undergraduate, master's and PhD students, as well as round tables aimed at a wider audience. Researchers of other universities also outside the EU will be involved to create a research network on the topics of EU democracy, legitimacy, bottom-up participation, with a special focus on young people. A final Conference will be organised at the end of the three-year period. The proposed action also aims to develop new interactive teaching methods. The project will produce a dissemination package including an official website of the Module, a YouTube Channel and dedicated accounts on social media networks. Content activities will be recorded and uploaded to the
