Breve descrizione

The digitalization of Money and Finance enabled by blockchain technology and the transition to sustainability are reshaping the whole economic system globally. Digitalization poses unprecedented challenges for institutions and regulators, as a new version of the Internet (Web3), a new form of money (digital money), new kinds of financial assets

(crypto-assets), and new business models are rapidly spreading around the World thanks to innovative blockchain applications. Meanwhile, the financial sector is increasingly affected by market innovations and policy reforms based on the integration of Environmental, Social, and Governance (ESG) considerations into the domains of Money and Finance. What will the Future of Money and Finance look like? How is the EU responding to these challenges? What is the role of EU Law within this global transformation process? The Jean Monnet Chair FUTMOFIN (2023–2026) is inspired by these farsighted questions. Based on the experience of the Jean Monnet Module (2016-2019) European Monetary and Economic Law (EMEL), the Chair addresses its teaching and research activities in the field of international and European economic, financial, and monetary law on the emerging debate on the Future of Money and Finance by matching the issues of blockchain and the digitalization of monetary and financial relations with those of climate change and sustainable development.
